UGA SBDC helps young entrepreneur grow landscaping side gig into thriving business

Stewart Ward has grown a college side hustle into a multimillion-dollar business with guidance from the University of Georgia Small Business Development Center (UGA SBDC). As founder and president of Quality Outdoors in Valdosta, Ward leads a team that designs and builds custom outdoor spaces—everything from landscaping and hardscapes to outdoor kitchens and lighting—for residential and commercial clients across South Georgia and North Florida.

A Valdosta native and graduate of Valdosta State University, Ward launched his business after earning a degree in biology and a minor in entrepreneurship in 2020. While many of his peers pursued traditional careers after college, Ward chose a different path by turning the part-time lawn maintenance job that helped fund his education into a full-time landscaping enterprise.

Since launching the company full-time in 2020, Ward has expanded his workforce and increased annual sales by more than 1,500%. With support from UGA SBDC consultants, he mastered QuickBooks, implemented strategic planning processes, and strengthened operations to position Quality Outdoors for sustainable growth.

“At the time, we were evolving from lawn maintenance to landscape installation, and we were struggling to grow. We needed help developing systems and getting the most out of our employees,” Ward said.
