Savannah entrepreneurs' startup finds fast track to success with UGA SBDC help

With support from the UGA Small Business Development Center (UGA SBDC), childhood friends and business partners Sean Dane-Kellogg and Max Lemaigre transformed their entrepreneurial vision into two thriving businesses—Detritus and JMS Dumpster Rental (dba Dumpster Rental Dogs).

What started as a two-person operation has grown into two companies that employ over 50 people in the Savannah area and generate millions in annual revenue.

Dane-Kellogg, who is a UGA alum, and Lemaigre launched Detritus in 2018 with just $5,000 and their own experiences working in the logistics and site services industry. Operating out of a spare bedroom, they built websites and fielded customer calls, growing Detritus into a nationwide digital marketplace that connects individuals and companies to essential job site services, including dumpsters, portable toilets, fencing and heavy machinery rentals.

“About a year and a half after we started Detritus, we decided to start our own assets company because we were getting so much business here in the Savannah area,” said Dane-Kellogg. “That’s when we started working with Chase. He helped us develop a business plan to apply for an SBA loan, which bought us our first dumpsters, our first couple of trucks. It was the birth of what is known as JMS Dumpster Rental.”
